OUR SINGERS SANDBAGGED.

Mr. Snyder Says Americans Are

Soaked for Debuts in Italy. Leonard V. Snyder of South Dakota, who has been studying voice in Florence with Vannini, got in on the Sant' Anna and is at the Waldorf.

"There are no Americans singing in Florence at present," said Mr. Snyder yesterday. "There were two there during the grand opera season, but Flor-ence during the last few years has suddenly developed into a centre for American voice students, as well as those who want to become painters and sculptors.

"Vannini has at least forty American pupils, mostly girls. With Lombardy there are many American young men, mostly those whose voices have been 'placed' and who go to him for coaching and finishing. There is a nice colony The pretty grounds of the Larchmont of young Americans there, but there is no such thing as a club. When I go back no such thing as a club. When I go back

The pretty grounds of the Larchmont Yacht Club were transformed last night for the annual Venetian fete and ball. The Tuesday of race week is always given up to the entertainment of the ladies and yeaterday from shortly after noon until midright the yachtsmen played host. In the harbor a large fleet of yachts tugged at their moorings. By order of Commodore Leonard Richards the yachts dressed ship at noon and thousands of multicolored flags fluttered in the fresh wind. On shore the blue and white striped burgee of the club dipped gracefully from the tall mast and strings of code flags were run to the end of the yard.

Automobiles began to arrive early because there were water sports and motor boat races in the afternoon and the visitors wanted to see the fun. Launches brought in other visitors from the fleet and by 3 o'clock when the sports began every inch of space

DUNCAN.—The Pilgrims of the United States desire to record their profound sorrow for the lose of their late Fresident, William Butler Duncan, one of the Founders of the society, and from the beginning an active member of its Executive Committee, and since February, 1007, its President. Mr. Duncan was at all times a most sealous and strenuous Anglo American. Born in America, but of notable Scotch descent. and educated in both countries; having throughout his life strong family ties on both sides of the water, he always appre-clated the great importance of maintaining not only friendly but cordial relations between the two countries, and did all he could to contribute to this result. He halled with exultation the formation of this society and of its kindred association of the same name in London as tending practically to promote perpetual friendship and peace between the two branches of the English speaking race.

At his delightful home in New York he was constantly entertaining celebrated Englishmen as well as those of lesser note. and his election in 1907 as President of The Pilgrims was recognized in London, as well as in New York, as the choice of the right man for the right place, for he was equally at home in both. o the discharge of the duties of this office, which he accepted with alacrity, he brought a generous enthusiasm and devotion, which contributed largely to the success of the society and of the objects which it was formed to promote. His distinguished social position, his em-nence as a man of business and his gental and lovable disposition admirably quali-fied him for the important post, and to the day of his death he devoted himself with a truly patriotic spirit to everything that tended to bring England and America into tended to bring England and America into bonds of closer union.

His position with us was exactly like that of Lord Roberts as President of The Pilgrims of Great Britain, and the two men were very similar in public spirit and in faithful allegiance to the cause of peage and good will. While each was a noble example of loyalty to his own Government and country, the two worked harmoniously together for the mutual object which they loved to cherish and advance.

Mr. Durcan was a spiendid example of

Mr. Dupcan was a splendid example of American citizenahlp. He rejoiced in everything that tended to maintain at the highest standard its honor and glory in the front rank of the nations, and deprecated and depised everything that could possibly bring it into public ridicule or contempt. He believed that no public official, however examined no American, however however exalted: no American, however famous had the right to resort to any measures or indulge in any conduct that would cast a cloud on our national charac-

And so in private life his conduct was ever guided by the highest sense of honor and responsibility. His manly courtesy, his aweetness of temper, his uniform willing-ness to serve and his reluctance to assume any appearance of leadership endeared him to all with whom he came in contact and made him especially dear to all who were associated with him in the good work of this society. We all leved him, and the simple dignity of his character commanded universal esteem and reverence.

In his death a great and familiar figure and a bright ornament has disappeared from the business and social life of New York. Let us honor his memory by string always to be true to his principles and his example. Hat the noble standard of ing always to be true to his principles and his example, that the noble standard of civic virtue which he so fitly represented may not perish or decline in the city which he loved and the country of which he was so proud. This will be indeed a worthy crown of his long and honorable life.
